THE ANTIOCHENE CONNECTION : ZONARAS, AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS, AND JOHN OF ANTIOCH ON THE REIGNS OF THE EMPERORS CONSTANTIUS II AND JULIAN (*)

The Epitome of Zonaras has been ignored as a historical source since the last part of the nineteenth century (1). Perhaps this fact is due to the disfavor into which Quellenforschungen has fallen in the last seventy odd years. At any rate, Zonaras' narrative about the Neo-Flavian emperors (2), perhaps the most valuable portion of the Epitome, escaped any real scrutiny until recently (3). It would appear that scholars believed this segment of the chronographer's work to be dependent on lost sources and, for that reason, not to be worthy

(*) I want to thank Professor Eugene N. Lane, of the University of Missouri, and Sister Agnes Cunningham, CSSM, of St. Mary's of the Lake Seminary, both of who read the article in toto and helped to minimize any errors therein : additionally thanks are due to Professor Ihor Ševčenko of Harvard and Professor Robert J. Rowland, Jr. of Missouri for much of the information contained in footnote 38. Additional thanks are owed to Mr. Stephen Russey, who read the final draft of this paper before its presentation at the tenth annual Conference for the Advancement of Early Studies at Ball State University on 19 October 1979

(1) E.g., W. A. SCHMIDT, "Ueber die Quellen des Zonaras", Zeitschrift für die Altertumswissenschaft, 1839, 238 ff. (= L. DINDORF [ed.], Zonaras' Epitome Historiarum, [Leipzig, 1875], III ff.) ; H. HAUPT, "Neue Beitragen den Fragmenten des Dio Cassius", Hermes, 14 (1879), 430 ff. ; J. A. WYNNE, Quaeritur unde argumentum libri octavi Zonarae annalium petitum sit (Groningen, 1860) ; E. ZANDER, Quibus e fontibus Joannes Zonaras hauserit annales suos Romanos (Ratzeburg, 1849) ; T. BUTTNER-WOBST, "Die Abhangigkeit des Geschichtschreibers Zonaras von den erhaltenen Quellen", CF (Leipzig, 1890), 123 ff.

(2) 12.32-13.13 (Bonn, ed.) ; throughout this article Zonaras will be referred to by his own name or as the chronographer.

(3) Michael DIMAIO, "Zonaras' Account of the Neo-Flavian Emperors : a Commentary" (Ph. D. diss., University of Missouri-Columbia, 1977 , hereinafter referred to as DiMaio).

of any detailed investigation (4). For these reasons the present study was deemed necessary.

Only two scholars delved into the Neo-Flavian segment of Zonaras with any real penetration. They are M. Heinemann and E. Patzig. Although Heinemann's comments covered the whole of the chronographers's account, they were largely concerned with listing earlier theories about Zonaras' sources. Patzig, however, dealt with the entire narrative on the Neo-Flavians in a series of diffuse articles (5). His pioneering research serves as the foundation of the present article.

The most interesting result of Patzig's studies was his contention that Zonaras derived much of his information about the Neo-Flavians from the history of John of Antioch (6). Such a hypothesis is not without foundation since the chronographer clearly used John in earlier parts of his narrative (7). Moreover, John's narrative seems

(4) K. Ziegler writes, "Der Anfang des XIII Buches ... scheint aus einer uns unbekannten verloreren Quelle zu stammen..." (RE, 10A, s.v. "Zonaras", col. 729.38 ff.)

(5) Max Heinemann, Quaestiones Zonareae Particula I (Dresden, 1895), 44 ff ; E. Patzig, "Ueber einige Quellen des Zonaras", BZ, 5 (1896), 25 ff. ; idem., "Ueber einige Quellen des Zonaras II", BZ, 6 (1897), 322 ff. ; idem., "Ueber die Quellen des Anonymus Valesii", BZ, 7 (1898), 572 ff. ; idem., "Die romischen Quellen des salmasischen Johannes Antiochenus", BZ, 13 (1904), 13 ff.

(6) BZ, 13 (1904), 13 ff.

(7) E.g., the expedition of Minucius Rufus and P Cornelius on the Danube in 221 B.C., Zonar., 8.20 (PI 405A3 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 51, FHG, 4.557 ; Aemilius Paulus and Perseus, King of Macedon, Zonar., 9.23 (PI 459C1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 57, FHG, 4.558 ; Terentius Maximus, the Pseudo-Nero, Zonar., 11.18 (PI 578C51 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 104, FHG, 4.578-9 ; a plague during the reign of the Emperor Gallus, Zonar., 12.21 (PI 628B5 ff.) = John of Antioch, ,fr. 151, FHG, 4.598 ; a famine during the reign of the Emperor Probus, Zonar., 12.29 (PI 638B1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 159, FHG, 4.600 ; the blinding of Numerian, Zonar., 12.30 (PI 639A ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 161, FHG, 4.600 ; the origin of the word θριαμβος, Zonar., 12.32 (PI 642D3 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 167.1, FHG, 4.602 ; the resignation of Diocletian and Maximianus Herculius, Zonar., 12.32 (PI 642B11 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 167.2, FHG, 4.605 ; the ancestory of the house of Sapor II, Zonar., 13.5.21 ff. = John of Antioch, fr. 178.1, FHG, 4.605 ; the affair of Numerius, Zonar., 13.12.8-9. = John of Antioch, fr. 167.2, FHG, 4.605 ; the ancestory of the house of Sapor II, Zonar., 13.5.21 ff. = John of Antioch, fr. 178.1, FHG, 4.605 ; the affair of Numerius, Zonar., 13.12.8-9 = John of Antioch, fr. 178.3, FHG, 4.605.

even to have affected those passages which Zonaras excerpted from Dio Cassius (8).

Patzig's hypothesis is based on the fact that a large number of passages in the chronographer have their counterparts in the Res Gestae of Ammianus Marcellinus (9). He also pointed out that Zonaras' account of the affair of Numerius (13.12.8-9) has its counterpart in Ammianus (10.1.4) and in John of Antioch (fr. 178.3, FHG, 4.605).

AMMIAN.	JOH. ANTIOCH	ZONARAS
Numerium Narbonensis paulo ante rectorem accusatum ut furem ... audiebat, qui cum infitiatione defenderet obiecta nec posset in quoquam confutari, Delphidius orator ... exclamavit "Ecquis, florentissime Caesar, nocens esse poterit usquam, si negare sufficiet ?"	Νουμεριανός τις κατηγορεῖτο ὑπό τινος ὡς κεκλοφὼς δημόσια χρήματα. ὁ δ' ἔξαρνος ἦν. ὁ δὲ κατήγορος οὐκ ἔχων ἐλέγχους καὶ τίς, ἔφη, βασιλέων ἄριστε, τῶν ὑπαιτίων δίκην ὑπόσχῃ, εἰ πρὸς τὸ ἐκφυγεῖν τὸ ἀρνηθῆναι μόνον ἀρκέσει ;	ποτὲ γοῦν δικάζων τινὶ κεκλοφέναι κατηγορουμένῳ δημόσια χρήματα καὶ τὴν κλοπὴν ἀρνουμένῳ, ἐπεὶ ὁ κατήγορος τίς, ἔφη, βασιλεῦ, ἐπ' ἐγκλήματι δίκην ὑπόσχῃ, εἰ ἐξ ἀρνήσεως ὠφελοῖντο οἱ αἰτιώμενοι ;
Contra quem Iulianus .. "Ecquis, ait, innocens	ὁ δὲ Ἰουλιανός · καὶ τίς, ἔφη, ἀναίτιος	ἐκεῖνος ἀνταπεκρίνατο · καὶ τίς

(8) For a discussion of Zonaras, Dio Cassius, and John of Antioch, see Appendix A to this article.

(9) E.g., the naming of the Cottian Alps, ZONAR., 13.5.3 = AMM. MARC., 15.10.2 ; Magnentius' plot against Gallus, ZONAR., 13.8.25 ff. = AMM. MARC., 14.7.4 ; Gallus' eclipse and death, ZONAR., 13.9.9 ff. = AMM. MARC., 14.7.5 ff. ; Silvanus' revolt., ZONAR., 13.9.21 ff. = AMM. MARC., 15.5.1 ff. ; the negotiations between Sapor II and Constantius II in 357, ZONAR., 13.9.27 ff. = AMM. MARC., 16.9.2 ff., 17.5 ff. ; events subsequent to Julian's acclamation, ZONAR., 13.10.20 ff. = AMM. MARC., 20.9.1 ff. ; Julian's visit to a Christian church, ZONAR., 13.11.4-6 = AMM. MARC., 21.2.4-5 ; Julian's vision at Vienne, ZONAR., 13.11.9 = AMM. MARC., 21.2.2 ; the character study of Constantius II, ZONAR., 13.11.31 = AMM. MARC., 21.16.7 ; Julian's comments about barbers, ZONAR., 13.12.12 = AMM. MARC., 22.4.9 ; the affair of Numerius, ZONAR., 13.12.8-9 = AMM. MARC., 18.1.4 ; the burning of Julian's fleet, ZONAR., 13.13.7-9 = AMM. MARC., 23.2.9, 24.7.5 ; the description of the battle in which Julian perished, ZONAR., 13.13.14 = AMM. MARC., 25.3.4 ff. ; the character study of Julian, ZONAR., 13.13.28 = AMM. MARC., 25.4.1 ff. ; Julian's death in Phrygia, ZONAR., 13.13.29 ff. = AMM. MARC., 25.3.9.

esse poterit, si accusasse sufficiet ?"	εὑρεθήσεται, εἰ ὁ κατήγορος ἐλέγχων χωρὶς πιστεύοιτο ;	ἔσται ἀναίτιος, εἰ ἐλέγχων ἄνευ πιστεύοιντο οἱ κατήγοροι ;

From parallels between the three passages, Patzig concluded that John used Ammianus as his source ; in turn, John was excerpted by Zonaras. As additional evidence to support his theory, Patzig pointed out that John, in fragment 176 (FHG, 4.605), combined two distinct passages from Ammianus (10). This passage, however, was not used by Zonaras. Patzig then simply listed those portions of the chronographer's narrative dealing with Julian (11) ; later he turned his attention to Zonaras' account of the Transgressor's successors (12). Possibly he ignored that portion of Zonaras' narrative covering the years from 354 to 363 because there were so many differences in internal detail between the chronographer and Ammianus. At any rate, his treatment of the latter portion of the chronographer's narrative, though diffuse, is accurate enough (13). In this article I have attempted to resolve those problematic passages

(10) BZ, 13 (1904), 28 ff.

(11) Patzig wrote : "Die gleiche Vereinigung von romischen und griechischen Quellen finden wir bei ZONAR., XIII 10/11 in dem Abschnitt, der über die Erhebung Julians zum Kaiser und den Tod des Constantius handelt. Nachdem Zonaras angegeben hat, dass Julian entweder aus Uebermut infolge seiner Siege ... oder aus Furcht, es konne ihn das Schicksal des Gallus (AMM., XXI, cp. 1, 2), das Heer bearbeitet habe, berichtet er ... die Erhebung Julians zum Kaiser, die Entsendung des Pentadius an Constantius und dessen Antwort durch den Quäster Leonas in Uerbereinstimmung mit AMMIAN, XX, cp. 4, 17/8 ; cp. 8, 5/9 ; cp. 9, 1/5. Die folgende anekdotenhafte Verhandlung zwischen Julian und Leonas ... verrat einen Quellenwechsel, aber nicht bei Zonaras, sondern bei Johannes Antiochenus ... scheint die Angabe von der Weihnachtsfeier Julians ... von AMM., XXI cp. 2, 4/5 beeinflusst zu sein. Die Erzahlung von dem Traume, durch den Julian den Tod des Constantius erfahrt ... stammt wieder aus AMMIAN, XXI, cp. 2, 2, weil in den Versen die Varianten mit Ammian, nicht mit ZOSIM., III, 9 stimmen. ... Ammians Einfluss ist nachtweisbar in der Schilderung der Entscheidungschlacht ..., in der Characteristik Julians ... und in der interessanten Anekdote ..., dass Julian im Traume von einem blonden Jüngling die Prophezeihung erhalten habe, er werde in Phrygien sterben". (BZ, 13 [1904], 32-33).

(12) BZ, 6 (1897), 337 ff. ; BZ, 13 (1904), 33 ff

(13) For this reason I have limited my comments to those portions of Zonaras which Patzig ignored which Patzig so carefully avoided. I have analyzed only those passages of Ammianus and Zonaras whose immediate relationship is far from clear. In cases where a simple comparison will show the validity of Patzig's hypotheses (14), no commentary was deemed necessary. Additionally I have included two appendices. One of them deals with John of Antioch's relationship with Dio and Zonaras, while the other treats the strengths and weaknesses of Patzig's hypothesis.

Three segments of the chronographer's narrative do not completely agree with their counterparts in the account of Ammianus Marcellinus ; they include the letter of Sapor II to Constantius II and the latter's response (13.9.25 ff.), Julian's letter to Constantius II after his accession to the throne in 361 (13.10.16 ff.), and Julian's subsequent interview with Constantius' envoy Leonas the Quaestor (13.10.20 ff.). Since these passages are quite important for the reconstruction of the momentous events of the mid-fourth century, they will be examined in detail (15).

Although the accounts of Ammianus and the chronographer about the missives exchanged by the rulers of Rome and Persia (16) are generally in agreement, there are enough differences in internal detail to make it clear that John of Antioch drew not only on Ammianus, but also on some unknown source. Ammianus describes the entire course of events which led to the dispatch of Sapor's letter to Constantius (16.9.2-4), material not contained in Zonaras' narrative. Additionally Ammianus notes that the Persian monarch sent Constantius gifts (17.5.1), another detail omitted by the chronographer. Providing his readers with information not contained in Ammianus, Zonaras says that Constantius received the letter of Sapor at Sirmium (13.9.25). Both writers reproduce the letter of Sapor to Constantius. Of the two versions that of Ammianus is the longer ; yet the chronographer's excerpt, though brief, contains the same detail. The two writers contend that Sapor

(14) E.g., the naming of the Cottian Alps, ZONAR., 13.5.3 ; the character sketch of Constantius II, ZONAR., 13.11.31 ; the character study of Julian, ZONAR., 13 13.28.

(15) For a reconstruction of these events, see DIMAIO, 324 ff., 348-352.

(16) AMM. MARC., 14.7.1 ff. ; ZONAR., 13.9.25 ff.

demanded the return of Armenia and Mesopotamia from Constantius ([17]). Ammianus adds that Sapor said he would begin a new campaign in the spring unless Constantius gave in to his demands (17.5.8). Zonaras does not mention this fact in his account. Both historians contain Constantius' response to the Persian monarch's demands. Yet each writer seems to have stressed different aspects of the emperor's answer. Ammianus claims that Constantius rejected the Persian terms and called them blackmail, whereas Zonaras says the Roman emperor wrote Sapor that Macedon, which had enslaved Persia, was now a vassal of Rome ([18]). Clearly both authors are following the same tradition, yet providing their readers with variant accounts about it.

Much the same conclusion can be drawn about the two writers' narrative describing Julian's letter to Constantius after the army had proclaimed the Caesar as Augustus ([19]). Ammianus tells his readers that Julian dispatched his magister officiorum Pentadius and his praepositus cubiculi Eutherius with a letter to the emperor, while Zonaras mentions only Pentadius by name ([20]). Unfortunately, Julian's letter to Constantius is no longer extant; only the chronographer's version of the letter, along with the copy of it in Ammianus, remain ([21]). Both versions substantially agree on details contained therein ([22]).

The narratives of Zonaras and Ammianus about Constantius' response to Julian's letter are substantially at odds. For instance, Ammianus reports that Constantius was angered when he heard about the rebellion, whereas the chronographer says that Constantius did not show any emotion ([23]). Both authors are in agreement

(17) AMM. MARC., 17.5.3-8 ; ZONAR., 13.9.256 ff.

(18) AMM. MARC., 17.5.10-14 ; ZONAR., 13.9.28.

(19) AMM. MARC., 20.8.2 ff. ; ZONAR., 10.10.16 ff.

(20) AMM. MARC., 20.8.19 ; ZONAR., 13.10.16.

(21) AMM. MARC., 20.8.5-17 ; ZONAR., 13.10.16 ff.

(22) Ammianus gives a lengthy account of the letter, whereas Zonaras provides only a brief excerpt ; both accounts contain one passage in common (AMM. MARC., 20.8.13 [= ZONAR., 13.10.18]), a fact that both sources probably used a common source. The only real difference between both narratives is that Ammianus' version contains what purports to be Julian's account of his acclamation (20.8.7-10).

(23) AMM MARC., 20.9.1 ff. ; ZONAR., 13.10.20.

about the contents of Constantius' response and the fact that Leonas the Quaestor carried the missive to Julian. The sources say Constantius indicated to his Caesar that he would not recognize his acclamation by the soldiers. The emperor continued that, if Julian were concerned for his own safety or for those closest to him, he should be content with te rank of Caesar (24). Additionally Leonas bore with him not only the response of Constantius, but also new commissions for men on Julian's staff, an action which underlined the emperor's confidence in his own strength (25).

Ammianus and Zonaras give different accounts of what happened next. The chronographer claims that Julian had a private interview with Leonas. The Caesar's response to the emperor's letter was abusive ; he rebuked Constantius for the crimes the emperor committed against his family and threatened to avenge any one who had been harmed injustly by him (13.10.23 ff.). Ammianus, omitting any reference to the private meeting, simply notes that Julian read the letter of the emperor to the assembled troops with Leonas in his presence. Both, sources are in accord that Leonas departed for the emperor when he realized that his mission had failed (26). As is the case in the other two cases evaluated above, both authors highlighted different aspects of the same series of events.

Where did Zonaras obtain his information ? If Patzig's hypothesis is employed, the differences between Ammianus and Zonaras still have to be explained. I advance the following speculative solution. All that is needed is a modification of the German scholar's thesis. The chronographer did use John of Antioch as his source. But the Antiochene employed another source to modify the material that he found in Ammianus. This source was perhaps some of the lost works of the Emperor Julian. For his discussion of Julian's letter to Constantius II John probably used the original document. Possibly he derived his information about the interview between Leonas and the Caesar from Julian's lost letter and oration to the Roman Senate

(24) ZONAR., 13.10.21-22 ; AMM. MARC., 20.9.4-8 ; ZOSIMUS (3.9.4) and AURELIUS VICTOR (Epit., 42.16) note that Constantius mentioned this last point ; Julian notes that Constantius sent him letters which were addresses to him as Caesar (Ep ad. Athen., 286C).

(25) AMM. MARC., 20.9.5 ; ZONAR., 13.10.28.

(26) ZONAR., 13.10.23-27 ; AMM. MARC., 20.9.6-7

which was issued on the usurper's march east after his acclamation in 361. From contemporary authors (27) we know only vague details about the contents of these two documents. But there is good reason to surmise that they were similar in nature to Julian's Epistula ad Athenienses (28). Needless to say, Ammianus probably employed the same source when he composed his Res Gestae ; all John did was to compare Julian's narrative with that of Ammianus and emphasized those details which the Latin author downplayed. Zonaras' account of Sapor's letter to Constantius may have had a similar origin. Libanius indicates that in the course of 362 Julian received ambassadors from Persia bearing Sapor's request for peace negotiations ; the emperor rejected this request, telling the envoys that he would soon be in Persia himself (29). Julian may have appended a copy of Constantius' earlier response to Sapor to his own missive to show that the Roman stance on peace with Persia had not changed, although the ruler had. Julian's response may have later become part of the corpus of Julian's letters which was

(27) Ammianus indicates that Julian, while at Naissus, wrote an oration full of invective against Constantius (21.10.7) ; Zosimus notes that the usurper sent aletter to the Senate and army informing them to keep the cities safe (3.10.3).

(28) Julian's Epistula ad Athenienses was written at the same time as was his oration and letter to the Roman Senate. Since their purpose, to arouse sympathy for the usurper's cause, was the same, it is possible that the contents of the lost documents were the similar to those of the Epistula. In the extant document, Julian includes a brief autobiography (Ep. ad Athen., 270C ff.). Among matters which he treated in it were his military activities in Gaul and his own acclamation as emperor (ibid., 280C-287D). It is likely that Julian's communications with the Senate and army of Rome were more detailed than those which he dispatched to the city of Athens since the Senate and the army actually made and broke emperors. Needless to say, Julian needed both groups' stamp of approval to give his cause some legitimacy. Among other things that he mentioned in the Epistula was his brief comment that he had recovered 20,000 prisoners of war from the Germans (280C). Similar data is only preserved in one other source – Zonaras' Epitome. Here the chronographer notes that Julian recovered 11,000 prisoners in 357 (13.10.9 ; see DiMaio, 340-1). Such figures could have been only obtained from Julian's own works since they are not preserved elsewhere. It is my belief that Zonaras obtained the material from the narrative of John of Antioch who had excerpted it directly from Julian's lost letter and oration. Although it could be argued that the chronographer himself excerpted Julian, it is hard to believe that the material survived until the twelfth century when Zonaras could have used it.

(29) Or., 12.76 ff., 17.19, 18.164.

published after the emperor's death. Unfortunately this letter has been lost. Both John and Ammianus consulted this letter in later years. Since John did treat Jovian's peace treaty with the Persians in 363 ([30]), he probably also touched upon similar material in his account of the reigns of Constantius II and Julian. The only major objection that can be raised about the hypothesis outlined above relates to the question whether or not the works of Julian, named above, were extant during the lifetime of John of Antioch. It is generally agreed that John's floruit was the first half of the seventh century. Sozomen, a ecclesiastical historian of the mid fifth century, cited nine letters of Julian which are still extant and fourteen others which are not ([31]). Zosimus, who composed his Nova Historia around the end of the same century, also quotes portions of Julian's works which have been lost ([32]). From this evidence it is possible to conclude that some of the lost material was still extant in the early sixth century. It is very plausible that the aforementioned documents were among the letters which were preserved and that they survived another century and were used by John. If they did not, one has to explain material in Zonaras which could not have been obtained from any other source.

Two portions of the chronographer's narrative, which are clearly derived from John of Antioch, are particularly interesting because John clearly did not understand the Latin of Ammianus. These segments are Zonaras' description of the expulsion of barbers from the imperial court (13.12.12) and his account of the battle in which Julian died on 26 June 363 (13.13.14). When Zonaras' description of the expulsion is compared with that in Ammianus Marcellinus, there is no doubt that the chronographer obtained his information from John of Antioch.

Zonar., 13.12.12	Amm. Marc., 22.4.9
κουρέα τε ζητήσας, ὡς προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ τοῦ Κωνσταντίου κουρεὺς πολυτελῶς ἐσ-	Evenerat eisdem diebus, ut ad demendum imperatoris capillum, tonsor ve-

(30) Fr. 181, FHG, 4.606.

(31) Muller, FHG, 4.536 ; W. C. Wright, The Works of the Emperor Julian (London, 1923), 3.xxvii.

(32) Momigliano, *OCD*², s.v. "Zosimus", p. 1150 ; Zos., 3 3.2.

ταλμένος, κουρέα ζητεῖν εἶπεν, ἀλλ' οὐ συγκλητικόν, καὶ αὐτὸν ἀπεπέμψατο.

nire praeceptus introiret quidem ambitiose vestitus. Quo viso Iulianus obstipuit, et "Ego" inquit "non rationalem iussi, sed tonsorem acciri".

The fact that Zonaras derives his account of the affair of Numerius, which is described several sections earlier in his narrative (13.12.8-9) from John of Antioch provides additional evidence for the contention that the chronographer excerpted his information from the same source. Yet Zonaras' (= John's) substitution of συγκλητικός for Ammianus' rationalis still has to be explained.

Similarly the chronographer's description of the battle in which Julian perished is also in error. His discussion of the Persian attack on the Roman forces is a mirror image of that in Ammianus (33). Zonaras claims that the Persians attacked the Romans' right wing, while Ammianus says that the enemy attacked the left wing. The mistake was the fault of the chronographer's probable source, John of Antioch.

The reason for John's error is not hard to determine when one examines the writer's use of another Latin source. Besides Ammianus Marcellinus, John also made extensive use of Eutropius' Epitome (34). One fragment of John is particularly interesting. In fragment 170 John discourses on the character of Constantine the Great (35). Eutropius, his source, wrote, verum insolentia rerum secundarum aliquantum Constantinum ex favorabili animi docilitate mutavit. Primum necessitudines persecutūs [Crispum], egregium virum filium et sororis filium, commodae indolis iuvenem interfecit (36). John translated Eutropius' description of Crispus' death as follows : Κωνσταντῖνος ... τῆς ἀδελφῆς τὸν υἱὸν Κομμόδης διαφθείρει

(33) ZONAR., 13.13.14 ; AMM. MARC., 25.3.4.

(34) E.g., Severus' expedition against Maxentius, JOHN OF ANTIOCH, fr. 169, FHG, 4.602 = EUTROP., 10.2.4 ; the character of Constantine the Great, JOHN OF ANTIOCH, fr. 170, FHG, 4.603 = EUTROP., 10.5-6 ; the death of Constans, JOHN OF ANTIOCH, fr. 172, FHG, 4.603-4 = EUTROP., 10.9.3 ff. ; Vetranio's character and Nepotian's revolt, JOHN OF ANTIOCH, fr. 173-4, FHG, 4.604 = EUTROP., 10.10.2 ff. ; the character of Constantius II, JOHN OF ANTIOCH, fr. 175.2, FHG, 4.604 = EUTROP., 10.15.1 ff. ; the character of Julian, JOHN OF ANTIOCH, fr. 180, FHG, 4.606 = EUTROP., 10.16.2 ff.

(35) FHG, 4.603.

(36) 10.6.3.

δόλῳ ... He has taken Eutropius' adjective commodae and turned it into a proper name Κομμόδης (37). If he mistranslates the sample Latin of Eutropius, he surely will have more problems with the complicated Latin of Ammianus Marcellinus. This fact at least simply explains the substitution of κατὰ τὸ ... δεξιὸν for sinistro cornu. The use of συγκλητικός for rationalis is more than simple mistranslation. John has interpreted the text of Ammianus and has assumed that a rationalis was always a consularis (= συγκλητικός) (38). The differences between Ammianus' account of the battle and that of the chronographer has not gone unnoticed ; yet scholars seem to have been at a loss to explain the divergence of both narratives (39).

(37) For a discussion on this point, see Muller's notes on fragment 170 (FHG, 4.603).

(38) The relationship of the passage in Ammianus to that in Zonaras is problematical. For καθολικός is the Greek synonym for rationalis (LSJ[9], s.v. "καθολικός", p. 855). Συγκλητικός, however, is equivalent to the Latin word senatorius (LSJ[9], s.v. "συγκλητικός", p. 1665). This information is substantiated by Mason (H. Mason, Greek Terms for Roman Institutions [Sarasota, 1974]).

In a letter to me, Professor Robert Rowland, of the University of Missouri, is of the opinion that John of Antioch, making an assumption based on Ammianus' comment (ambitiose vestitutus), believed a rationalis was a senator. Interestibly enough this hypothesis was first advanced by Edward Gibbon, although the great historian assumed that Zonaras was the one who substituted συγκλητικός for rationalis (The Decline and the Fall of the Roman Empire, [New York, n.d.], 1.747, n. 54).

Another thesis, however, which cannot be ruled out is that John believed συγκλητικός to be a synonym for rationalis. This is an assumption that is based on the fact that καθολικός, the Greek synonym for rationalis, seems also to have been used as the equivalent for consularis (LSJ[9], s.v. "καθολικός", p. 655). In other words, John saw the word rationalis in his text of Ammianus and translated it with the word συγκλητικός ; he could have assumed that συγκλητικός was equivalent to καθολικός, as synonym for rationalis.

Finally I would like to thank Ihor Ševčenko of Harvard who provided me with much information about the relationship of συγκλητικός to rationalis.

(39) Needless to say, there has been a lot of speculation about this matter Sudhaus has argued, "... Zonaras auctore mihi utendum esse putavi, quippe qui ex Ammiano haussise mihi videatur" (H. Sudhaus, De ratione, quae intercedat inter Zosimi et Ammiani de bello a Juliano imperatore cum Persis gesto relationes, [diss Bonn, 1870], 82). Buttner-Wobst has rejected this hypotheses noting that Zonaras probably did not know Latin ; he went on to argue that the chronographer drew his information from the Anonymous Continuator of Dio

Additionally John seems to have mistranslated or altered Ammianus' description of Julian's fleet. Ammianus claims that it consisted of 1,000 cargo vessels, fifty warships, and fifty vessels for the building of bridges ; Zonaras says that it was made up of seven hundred triremes and four hundred cargo vessels ([40]). Although both writers give different breakdowns of the number of vessels, they are both in agreement that there was a total of 1,100. Perhaps John adapted Ammianus' total and then made his own division of the various types of ships ; at any rate, Ammianus and Zonaras agree that there were only twelve ships left after Julian burned his fleet ([41]).

The arguments outlined above do not apply to the differences between Ammianus and Zonaras in relation to the last date that Julian attended a Christian service. The chronographer claims that the event occurred on Christmas 360, while Ammianus notes that this event happened on Epiphany 361. Possibly there is no conflict between the two datings. The Eastern Orthodox Church celebrated Jesus' nativity and baptism on 6 January, while the Church of Rome dated the nativity to 25 December ([42]). John, Zonaras' source, saw the word Epiphania in his text of Ammianus and, as a eastern Christian, simply substituted the phrase τῆς γενεθλίου τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμέρας for it.

Cassius whom he equated with Petrus Patricius (T. BÜTTNER-WOBST, "Der Tod des Kaisers Julian", Philologus, 51 [1892], 579-80). Patzig, however, believed that Leo the Grammarian was the origin of Zonaras' material (BZ, 6 [1897], 335 ff.).

(40) AMM. MARC., 23.3.9 ; ZONAR., 13.13.6.

(41) The bruning of Julian's fleet : AMM. MARC., 24.7.5 ; ZONAR., 13.13.7 ; for a reconstruction of the event, see DIMAIO, 427 ff.

Although John seems to have altered the first set of figures, he did not change the number of those ships that remained intact. The fact that material contained in two separate passages of Ammianus (23.3.9, 24.7.5) is telescoped into one portion of Zonaras' narrative (13.13.7) provides additional evidence that the chronographer derived his information from John. At one point in his narrative (fr. 176, FHG, 4.605) John condensed two separate sections of Ammianus' text (15.8.17, 21.14.1). In fragment 176 of John of Antioch both sections are unrelated. The first deals with events of Julian's acclamation, while the second describes a vision which the Emperor Constantius had about his own downfall. At least in his account about Julian's fleet, John combined material which was related

(42) ZONAR., 13.11.4-6 ; AMM. MARC., 21.2.4-5 ; DIMAIO, 354-5, n. 13.

The chronographer's account of Silvanus' revolt in 355 (13.9.21 ff.) is worthy of discussion because we possess not only Ammianus Marcellinus' narrative of the event (15.5.1 ff.), but also John's account of the revolt (fr. 174, FHG, 4.604). The most detailed description of the revolt is contained in Ammianus ; Zonaras is the only other source which gives the rebellion more than a passing treatment ([43]). The chronographer notes that Ursicinus won over the troops of the usurper with a bribe, a fact which Ammianus seems to confirm ([44]). If John had mentioned this fact in his narrative, then the issue would be quite clear cut. But John states that Silvanus revolted in Gaul and πρὸ τριακοστῆς ἡμέρας ἐκποδὼν κατέστη. At first glance, the reader would assume that Zonaras obtained his material from a source other than John of Antioch because the detail of the chronographer's description does not coincide with that in John. Yet it should be stressed that we possess only an extract or paraphrase from John's narrative. Perhaps Zonaras' text of John was more detailed than the extract of the latter preserved today ([45]). Additional support for the view advanced here is the fact that the chronographer seems to have obtained his information on the Praepositus Rhodanus (13.15.14 ff.) from fragment 183 of John (FHG, 4.607). Here, as is the case with his account of Silvanus' revolt, Zonaras' comments are more detailed than those of John ; the chronographer even gives the name of the woman involved – Berenice (13.15.15). Zonaras seems to have included material in his narrative which is not preserved in the extant text of John.

Unfortunately what has been said about the chronographer's account of Silvanus' revolt does not apply to his discussion of Gallus' actions at Antioch and the Caesar's death. The most extensive treatment of Gallus' eclipse and death is preserved in

(43) For a discussion of the events surrounding Silvanus' revolt, see DIMAIO, 320 ff. ; other sources mention Silvanus' revolt in passing (THEOPH., AM 5849 [1.44.18 ff.] ; OROSIUS, 7.29.14 ; SOCRATES, Hist. Eccl., 2.32, PG 67, 296A ; SOZOM., Hist. Eccl., 4.7.4 ; JULIAN, Or., 1.48C ff., Ep. ad Athen., 273D, 274C ; THEODORET., Hist. Eccl., 3.16.21).

(44) ZONAR., 13.9.24 ; AMM. MARC., 15.5.30.

(45) It is not detrimental to this theory that John obtained his information, for at least part of the fragment, from Eutropius (10.13) since he could have added information from Ammianus in a lost portion of the fragment.

Ammianus Marcellinus (46). Verbal similarities indicate that Zonaras excerpted much of his material from the narratives of John of Rhodes and Philostorgius (47). This is not to say that John of Antioch did not have any effect on the chronographer. There is one detail in Zonaras' narrative which is otherwise only attested by Ammianus ; therefore we can assume that Zonaras had at least read John's account. Only Ammianus and the chronographer mention the mutilation of the bodies of Montius and Domitianus and their final resting place in the Orontes (48). Zonaras also reports that Constantia, Gallus' wife, supposedly supported her husband's arrest of Montius and Domitianus (13.9.14). He probably obtained his information from his source Philostorgius, although the material was also treated by Ammianus (49).

Perhaps portions of Zonaras' narrative can be utilized to restore lost segments of Ammianus' Res Gestae. This is very likely the case with the chronographer's account of Magnentius' plot against Gallus (13.8.25-31). Here Zonaras claims that, to divert some of Constantius' attention from him, Magnentius sent one of his servants to Antioch to murder Gallus. Magnentius' agent lodged with an old lady while he attempted to win many of the Caesar's troops to his cause. As soon as the woman learned what was going on, she reported the matter to Gallus, who punished all those who were involved in the plot. According to Ammianus' brief narrative about the subject the old lady was rewarded by being allowed to ride of the gates of the palace in a carriage (50).

The plot is mentioned only by Zonaras. The chronographer gives the plot's details, while Ammianus mentions the old lady's reward. If Patzig's hypothesis that Zonaras derived much of his information from John of Antioch is correct, then, perhaps, this section of the

(46) Gallus' actions at Antioch and his downfall · ZONAR., 13.9.9 ff. ; AMM. MARC., 14.7.1 ff. ; for a detailed discussion of both sets of events, see DIMAIO, 312 ff. ; AMM. MARC., 14.7.1 ff

(47) Ibid., 318 ; PATZIG, BZ, 6 (1897), 329.

(48) AMM. MARC., 14.7 6 ; ZONAR., 13.9.15

(49) PHILOSTORGUS, Hist Eccl., 3.28 (Bidez, 54-5) ; Ammianus reports that while Gallus was being questioned by Constantius' agents following his arrest, he said that he was incited to his actions by his wife (14.11.22).

(50) 14.7.4.

chronographer's narrative gives the reader some idea what were the contents of the lost portion of Ammianus (pace the views of E. A. Thompson) (51). Such an approach to Ammianus and Zonaras has validity only when there is enough internal evidence to support any conclusions arrived at (52).

The origins of two sections of Zonaras' narrative are far from clear. The first deals with Julian's vision at Vienne which foretold Constantius II's death, whereas the other discusses Julian's vision of a young man who told the emperor that he would die in Phrygia. Both sections have their counterparts in Ammianus' account (53). On the surface, both segments of the chronographer's narrative would seem to be solid evidence that Patzig's hypothesis is valid. But this is not necessarily true because both visions are attested in other extant sources which Zonaras could have used just as easily as the account of John of Antioch. The first vision is also recounted by Zosimus. One could argue that the chronographer used Zosimus here because he apparently employed his account in his discussion of Magnentius' revolt (54). I have been unable to arrive at any conclusion on this point. The situation relating to the second is even more contorted since the story is also related by the Chronicon Paschale and Malalas (55). Ammianus and Zonaras say that the young man said that Julian would die in Phrygia ; Malalas claims that it would happen in Asia. The Chronicon Paschale notes that Julian would be

(51) Thompson wondered whether Ammianus actually treated Magnentius' plot in the lost books of his history ; he argued that Gallus was discussed only in Book 14 of Ammianus and that the historian's only interest in the plot was that it was revealed by an aliqua mulier vilis (E. A. THOMPSON, The Historical Work of Ammianus Marcellinus [Cambridge, 1947], 56 ff.). Blockley, however, noted that Book 14 discussed the last year in the reign of Gallus and that, for this reason, Thompson's statement is questionable (R. C. BLOCKLEY, "Constantius Gallus and Julian as Caesars of Constantius II", Latomus, 21 [1972], 439).

(52) E.g., Patzig's comments about the claim of the chronographer that Licinius died at Serrae are extreme (BZ, 7 [1898], 576 ff.) ; for a discussion of the sources dealing with the death of Licinius and the unique nature of Zonaras' account, see DIMAIO, 170, note 109.

(53) Julian's vision at Vienne : ZONAR., 13.11.9 ; AMM. MARC., 21.2.1 ff. ; Julian's vision about his own death : ZONAR., 13.13.29 ; AMM. MARC., 25.3.9.

(54) ZOS., 3.9.6 ; DIMAIO, 277 ff.

(55) Chron P., ann., 363 ([Bonn ed.], 1.550.20 ff.) ; MALALAS, 1.327.8 ff.

in Rhasia. Only the Byzantine sources give the full story about Julian's vision ; Ammianus simply notes that Julian gave up hope when he learned that he had been wounded in Phrygia. Patzig, of course, believed that Zonaras obtained his information from John of Antioch (56). Büttner-Wobst, however, has advanced a theory which provides an explanation of the textual differences between the narratives of all the sources. He has argued that Malalas and Zonaras used a common source. Although he does not say so in so many words, he leaves the impression that it was Eutychianus of Cappadocia whom Malalas adduced as his source (57). Patzig's theory is attractive because it is so deceptively simple ; it does not take into account the differences of internal detail in the four narratives which treat the event. Büttner-Wobst's hypothesis, though it explains the textual differences of the four narratives, does not explain the similarities of the four authors. For these reasons I have been unable to choose between the two points of view on the origins of Zonaras' information.

Patzig's hypothesis has stood the test of time with a few modifications. It has not been noticed before that John may have used portions of Julian's lost works as one of his sources. This is particularly evident from an evaluation of the discussion between Julian and Leonas preserved in Zonaras. Additionally John seems to have combined material from several parts of Ammianus and employed it for his own use. This point is supported by a comparison of the chronographer's description of Julian's fleet with that in Ammianus Marcellinus. Perhaps the most interesting result of this study was the reaffirmation that John's knowledge of Latin was none too extensive. Not only did he mistranslate portions of Eutropius, but also parts of Ammianus Marcellinus. The description of the battle in which Julian died, which is preserved in Zonaras, proves this. I should point out that many of the conclusions arrived at in this article are speculative since long streches of John's work are no longer extant. In a later article I hope to determine whether or not Patzig's hypothesis can be applied successfully to those portions of Zonaras' narrative which deal with Julian's successors.

(56) BZ, 6 (1897), 336.
(57) Philologus, 51 (1892), 564, note 8.

APPENDIX A

Zonaras, Dio Cassius, and John of Antioch

Clearly Dio Cassius (= Xiphilinus) was one of Zonaras' major sources in those portions of the Epitome that cover the history of the Roman empire ([58]). Additionally scholars have shown that John of Antioch employed Dio as one of his sources of information ([59]). What is particularly interesting is that there is a arge number of passages in common between all three authors ([60]). From an analysis of all the

(58) U. Ph. Boissevain, "Zonaras' Quelle fur die romische Kaisergeschichte von Nerva bis Severus Alexander", Hermes, 26 (1891), 440 ff. ; Buttner-Wobst, CF (Leipzig, 1890), 142 ff. ; DiMaio, 205-6, 465-6.

(59) E.g., C. de Boor, "Romische Kaisergeschichte in byzantinischen Fassung III : Die Salmasischen und Treuschen Manasses", BZ, 2 (1893), 209 ff. ; H Haupt, "Ueber die Herkunft der dem Dio Cassius Beigelegten Planudischen Excerpte", Hermes, 14 (1879), 36-64, 291 ff. ; idem., Hermes, 14 (1879), 431 ff. ; T. Mommsen, "Ueber die dem Cassius Dio Beigelegten Theile der Planudischen und der Constantinischen Excerpte", Hermes, 6 (1871), 82 ff.

(60) E.g., the mutilation of Cicero's head by Fulvia, Dio Cass., 47.8.2 ff = Zonar., 10.17 (PI 501C1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 75, FHG, 4.567 ; Cicero's visions about Octavian's future greatness, Dio Cass., 45.1.3 ff. = Zonar., 10 13 (PI 494B1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 78.1, FHG, 4.568 ; Augustus' marriage to Livia, Dio Cass., 48.44.1 ff. = Zonar., 10.23 (PI 513 D1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 78.3, FHG, 4.568 ff. ; Maecenas and Augustus, Dio Cass., 55.7.1 ff. = Zonar., 10.35 (PI 538C1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 78.5, FHG, 4 569 ; Augustus and Athenodorus, Dio Cass., 56.43.1 ff. = Zonar , 10.38 (PI 549B1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 78.6, FHG, 4.569 ; the character of Tiberius, Dio Cass., 57.1.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.1 (PI 545C1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 79.1, FHG, 4 569 ; the character of Gaius, Dio Cass., 59 4.6 ff. = Zonar., 11.5 (PI 544A1 ff) = John of Antioch, fr. 82, FHG, 4.571 ; Gaius' gambling, Dio Cass., 59.22.3 ff. = Zonar., 11.6 (PI 556D1 ff) = John of Antioch, fr. 83 (ll. 1-8), FHG, 4 572 ; the plot of Cassius Chaerea and Cornelius Sabinus against Gaius, Dio Cass., 59.29.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.7 (PI 559B1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 84, FHG, 4.572 ; the character of Claudius, Dio Cass., 60.2.2 ff. = Zonar., 11.8 (PI 560B4 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 85, FHG, 4.572 ff. ; the execution of Cassius Chaerea, Dio Cass., 60.3.4 ff. = Zonar., 11.8 (PI 560D9 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 86, FHG, 4.573 ; Claudius searches all who approach him, Dio Cass., 60.3.2-3 = Zonar., 11.8 (PI 560D5 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 87, FHG, 4.573 ; the murder of Claudius, Dio Cass., 60 34.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.11 (PI 566C10 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 89, FHG, 4.573 ff. ; the death of Britannicus, '61.7.4 ff. = Zonar., 11.12 (PI 568D4 ff) = John of Antioch, fr. 90 (11.87 ff.), FHG, 4.575 ff. ; the death of passages it can be determined that Zonaras obtained all his material from Dio.

Zonaras' dependance on Dio, however, was not absolute. Although he employed Dio as his major source of information about the late republic and empire, he probably used John's narrative as a source for that material available only in John which is interwoven between those portions of the Epitome derived from Dio Cassius (61).

There is also evidence that the chronographer compared the narrative of Dio with that of John ; sometimes he even adopted some of the latter's phraseology in that material which he excerpted from Dio. There are a number of instances where this is the case (62).

Nero's wife Octavia, Dio Cass., 62.13.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.12 (PI 569B ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 90 (11.93 ff.), FHG, 4.575 ; the murder of Agrippina, Dio Cass., 61.13.4 ff. = Zonar., 11.12 (PI 569A ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 90 (ll. 119 ff.), FHG, 4.575 ff. ; the lineage of Vindex, Dio Cass., 63.22.12 = Zonar., 11.13 (PI 570B4 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 91 (ll. 1 ff.), FHG, 4.575 ; the selection of Galba as emperor, Dio Cass., 63.23 = Zonar., 11.13 (PI 570B9 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 91 (ll. 6 ff.), FHG, 4.575 ; Nero plans to flee to Alexandria, Dio Cass., 63.27.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.13 (PI 571A1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 91 (ll. 19 ff.), FHG, 4.575 ; Nero's flight and death, Dio Cass., 63.29.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.13 (PI 571A1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 91 (ll. 25 ff.), 92, FHG, 4.576 ; Domitian's attempt to hasten Titus' death, Dio Cass., 66.26.2 ff. = Zonar., 11.18 (PI 579C6 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 105, FHG, 4.579 ; the murder of Domitian, Dio Cass., 677.15.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.19 (PI 581B1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr 107, FHG, 4.579 ff. ; visions foreshadowing the death of Domitian, Dio Cass., 67.16.2 ff. = Zonar., 11.19 (PI 581C5 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 108, FHG, 4.580 ; Nerva on the Roman constitution, Dio Cass., 68.3.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.21 (PI 684D5 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 109, FHG, 4.580 ; Nerva's adoption of Trajan, Dio Cass., 68.34 = Zonar., 11.21 (PI 684A6 ff) = John of Antioch, fr. 110, FHG, 4.580 ; Trajan and Licinius Sura, Dio Cass., 68.15.32 ff. = Zonar., 11.22 (PI 586A ff. = John of Antioch, fr. 112, FHG, 4 581 ; Similis and Trajan, Dio Cass., 69.19.1 ff. = Zonar., 11.24 (PI 591A4 ff. = John of Antioch, fr. 114, FHG, 4.581 ; the revolt of Cassius, Dio Cass., 72.22.2 = Zonar., 12.3 (PI 596A6 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 118, FHG, 4.582 ; Marcus Aurelius' letter to the Senate on the death of Faustina, Dio Cass., 72.30.1 ff. = Zonar., 12.3 (PI 596C1 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 118, FHG, 4.582 ; the months of the year named after Commodus, Dio Cass., 73.15.3 ff. = Zonar., 12.5 (PI 599C7 ff.) = John of Antioch, fr. 120, FHG, 4.584-5.

(61) E.g., passages between Zonar., 9.23 and 11.18 ; for a full listing, supra, note 7.

(62) Maecenas and Augustus, Zonar., 10.35 ; the character of Gaius, Zonar., 11.5 ; Gaius' gambling, Zonar., 11.6 ; the character of Claudius, Zonar., 11.8 ; Nero's flight and death, Zonar., 11.13 ; Domitian's attempt to hasten Titus' death,

Because of limitations of space, a detailed evaluation will be undertaken only of Zonaras' account of the relationship between Maecenas and Augustus (10.35), the character of the Emperor Claudius (11.8), and Nero's flight and death (11.13). In these three sets of passages Zonaras clearly borrowed from John of Antioch ; in other instances the chronographer's verbal reminiscences are limited to a word or two (63).

At 10.35 (PI584A1 ff.) Zonaras discourses on Maecenas' curbing of Augustus' severe death sentences. When this portion of the narrative is compared with the related passages in Dio and John, the reader can easily determine that the chronographer used Dio as his major source as internal detail and languages indicate.

John, fr. 78.5	Dio, 55.7.1 ff.	Zonar., 10.35
Τούτου ποτὲ δικάζοντος, καὶ πολλῶν θάνατον καταψηρισαμένου, Μηκήνας τις ἀνὴρ σοφὸς ἀγαπώμενος ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, μὴ δυνάμενος ἐντυχεῖν αὐτῷ διὰ τὸ πλῆθος, ἔγραψεν ἐν χάρτῃ «ἀνάστηθι, δήμιε,» καὶ σημηνάμενος ἔρριψεν ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ αὐτοῦ. Ὅπερ ἀναγνοὺς ἐκεῖνος ἀνέστη, καὶ ἐκέλευσεν ἀργῆσαι τὰ κριθέντα. Τινός ποτε τῶν συστρατευσαμένων αὐτῷ δεηθέντος τῆς εἰς τὸ βουλευτήριον αὐτοῦ παρουσίας, εἶπεν αὐτὸς μὲν ἀσχολεῖσθαι, ἐπιτρέψαι δέ τινι τῶν φίλων παραγενέσθαι καὶ τὴν χρείαν	Ἐπὶ μὲν οὖν τούτοις ἐγαυροῦτο, τοῦ δὲ δὴ Μαικήνου τελευτήσαντος ἤλγησε, πολλὰ μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἄλλα ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἀπώνητο, ὅθεν καίπερ ἱππεῖ αὐτῷ ὄντι καὶ τὸ ἄστυ ἐπὶ πολὺν χρόνον ἐπέτρεψε, μάλιστα δὲ ὁσάκις ἀκρατοτέρῳ τῷ θυμῷ ἐχρῆτο· τῆς τε γὰρ ὀργῆς αὐτὸν ἀεὶ παρέλυε καὶ ἐς τὸ ἠπιώτερον, μεθίστη. τεκμήριον δέ, δικάζοντί ποτε αὐτῷ προσστάς καὶ ἰδὼν ὅτι πολλοὺς θανατώσειν μέλλοι, ἐπεχείρησε μὲν διώσασθαι τοὺς περιεστηκότας καὶ ἐγγὺς οἱ προσελθεῖν, μὴ δυνηθεὶς δὲ ἔγραψεν ἐς γραμματεῖον	Τοῦ δὲ Μαικήνου τελευτήσαντος ἤλγησε· πολλὰ μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἄλλα ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ὠνητο, μάλιστα δὲ τῆς ὀργῆς, ὅτε ἀκρατέστερον αὐτῇ ἐκέχρητο, παρελύετο καὶ μετήνεκτο πρὸς τὸ ἠπιώτερον. τεκμήριον δέ, δικάζοντός ποτε καὶ πολλὰς ἀποφηναμένου ψήφους θανατικὰς, ἐπεχείρησε μὲν ὁ Μαικήνας διώσασθαι τοὺς περιεστῶτας καὶ ἐγγὺς αὐτῷ προσελθεῖν, μὴ δυνηθεὶς δὲ ἔγραψεν ἐν χάρτῃ μικρῷ «ἀνάστα, δήμιε», καὶ αὐτὸ εἰς τὸν κόλπον αὐτοῦ ἔρριψεν· ὃ ἐπελθὼν ἐκεῖνος εὐθὺς ἀνέστη καὶ τὰς ψήφους

Zonar., 11.18 ; Nerva on the Roman constitution, Zonar., 11.21 ; Trajan and Licinius Sura, Zonar., 11.22.

(63) This is surely the ase with Zonaras' account of Titus' death (11.18 [PI 579C6 ff.]). Here Zonaras indicates that ἔμπνουν μέντοι, αὐτὸν [Τίτον] ἔτι, ὄντα καὶ τάχα περιγένεσθαι δυνάμενον ἐς λάρνακα πλήρη χιόνος ὁ Δομετιανὸς ἐνέβαλεν, ὡς δεομένης τῆς τάχα τινὸς περιψύξεως ... ; Dio says that, while Titus was still breathing ... αὐτὸν ... ἐς λάρνακα χιόνος πολλῆς γέμουσαν ὁ Δομετιανὸς ἐνέβαλεν . (66.26.2). John of Antioch notes that Domitian placed Titus ἐς λάρνακα πλήρη χιόνος (fr. 105, FHG, 4.478). Clearly the chronographer read both accounts and substitute John's phrase πλήρη χιόνος for Dio's wording χιόνος πολλῆς γέμουσαν.

πληρῶσαι· καὶ ὃς ὀργισθεὶς ἔφη, «Ἐγὼ μέν τοι ὁσάκις τῆς ἐμῆς ἐπικουρίας ἐδεήθης, οὐκ ἄλλον ἀντ' ἐμοῦ ἔπεμψα.» Ἐρυθριάσας οὖν ὁ Καῖσαρ καὶ συναπῆλθε καὶ συνέπραξε.	«ἀνάστηθι ἤδη ποτέ, δήμιε,» καὶ αὐτὸ ὡς καὶ ἕτερόν τι ἔχον ἐς τὸν κόλπον αὐτοῦ ἔρριψεν, ὥστ' ἐκεῖνον μήτ' ἀποκτεῖναί τινα καὶ εὐθὺς ἐξαναστῆναι.	ἠκύρωσεν ἃς τηνικαῦτα ἦν ψηφισάμενος.

There is also evidence that Zonaras made some modifications in his account based upon material in John. Where Dio wrote δικάζοντί ποτε αὐτῷ προσστάς (55.7.1), John noted τούτου ποτὲ δικάζοντος. In turn, Zonaras used John's phraseology : δικάζοντός ποτε. Dio Cassius indicates that Maecenas, when he was unable to approach Augustus, ... ἔγραψεν ἐς γραμματεῖον "ἀναστήθι ἤδη ποτέ, δήμιε ..." (55.7.2). John modified Dio's statement by substituting ἐν χάρτῃ for ἐς γραμματεῖον and by excising ἤδη ποτέ from Maecenas' note. The chronographer follows John in this and notes that Maecenas ἔγραψεν ἐν χάρτῃ μίκρῳ "ἀνάστα, δήμιε ..." Additionally where Dio used a result clause (ὥστε ἐκεῖνον μήτ' ἀποκτεῖναί τινα καὶ εὐθὺς ἐξαναστῆναι [55.7.2]), John used an indicative (ἀνέστη). Zonaras adopted the grammatical structure employed by John, but maintained the particle εὐθύς that appears in the text of Dio.

When one compares the description of the character of Claudius in Zonaras with those in Dio and John, the reader can see that both later sources emphasized different aspects of Dio's narrative.

John, fr. 85	Dio, 60.2.2	Zonar., 11.8
	Οὕτω μὲν Τιβέριος Κλαύδιος Νέρων Γερμανικός, ὁ τοῦ Δρούσου τοῦ τῆς Λιουίας παιδὸς υἱός, τὴν αὐτοκράτορα ἀρχὴν ἔλαβε, μὴ πρὶν ἐν ἡγεμονίᾳ τινὶ τὸ παράπαν· ἐξητασμένος, πλὴν ὅτι μόνον ὑπάτευσεν· ἦγε δὲ πεντηκοστὸν ἔτος τῆς ἡλικίας.	Καὶ οὕτω Τιβέριος Κλαύδιος Νέρων Γερμανικὸς ὁ τοῦ Δρούσου τοῦ τῆς Λιβίας υἱοῦ παῖς τῆς αὐτοκρατοῦς ἀρχῆς ἔτυχεν, ἄγων ἔτος πεντηκοστὸν
Ὅτι Κλαύδιος ὁ βασιλεὺς Ῥωμαίων τὴν μὲν ψυχὴν οὐ φαῦλος ἐγεγόνει, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν παιδείᾳ ἤσκητο ὡς καὶ συγγράψαι τινά· τὸ δὲ δὴ σῶμα νοσώδης, ὥστε καὶ τῇ κεφαλῇ καὶ ταῖς χερσὶν ὑποτρέμειν. Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο καὶ	Ἐγένετο δὲ τὴν μὲν ψυχὴν οὐ φαῦλος, ἀλλὰ ἀεὶ καὶ ἐν παιδείᾳ ἤσκητο, ὥστε καὶ συγγράψαι τινά, τὸ δὲ δὴ σῶμα νοσώδης, ὥστε καὶ τῇ κεφαλῇ καὶ ταῖς χερσὶν ὑποτρέμειν. καὶ διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τῷ φωνήματι ἐσφάλλετο, καὶ	ἐγένετο δὲ τὴν μὲν ψυχὴν οὐ φαῦλος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν παιδείᾳ ἤσκητο, ὥστε καὶ συγγράψαι τινά· τὸ δὲ σῶμα νοσώδης.

τῷ φωνήματι ἐσφάλλετο, καὶ οὐ πάντα ὅσα εἰς τὸ συνέδριον εἰσέφερεν, αὐτὸς ἀνεγίνωσκεν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ταμίᾳ ὡς γε πλήθει ἀναλέγεσθαι ἐδίδου ὅσα δ' αὐτὸς ἀνεγίνωσκε, καθήμενος ὡς τὸ πολὺ ἐπελέγετο.

Καὶ μέντοι καὶ δίφρῳ καταστέγῳ πρῶτος Ῥωμαίων ἐχρήσατο.

Οὐ μέντοι καὶ διὰ ταῦτα οὕτως ὅσον ὑπὸ τῶν ἐξελευθέρων καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν γυναικῶν αἷς συνῆν ἐκακύνετο. Περιφανέστατα γὰρ ἐγυναικοκρατήθη καὶ ἐδουλοκρατήθη. ἅτε ἐκ παίδων ἐν νοσηλείᾳ καὶ ἐν φόβῳ τραφείς· καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἐπὶ πλέον τῆς ἀληθείας εὐήθειαν προσεποιεῖτο, ὅπερ που καὶ αὐτὸς ὡμολόγησε. Καὶ πολὺν μὲν χρόνον τῇ τηθῇ Λιουίᾳ, πολὺν δὲ καὶ τῇ μητρὶ Ἀντωνίᾳ τοῖς τε ἀπελευθέροις συνδιαιτηθείς, καὶ προσέτι καὶ ἐν συνουσίαις γυναικῶν πλείοσι γενόμενος, οὐδὲν ἐλευθεροπρεπὲς ἐκέκτητο.

οὐ πάντα ὅσα ἐς τὸ συνέδριον ἐσέφερεν αὐτὸς ἀνεγίγνωσκεν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ταμίᾳ, τήν γε πρώτην καὶ παρὼν ὡς γε πλήθει, ἀναλέγεσθαι ἐδίδου. ὅσα δ' οὖν αὐτὸς ἀνεγίγνωσκε, καθήμενος ὡς τὸ πολὺ ἐπελέγετο. καὶ μέντοι καὶ δίφρῳ καταστέγῳ πρῶτος Ῥωμαίων ἐχρήσατο, καὶ ἐξ ἐκείνου καὶ νῦν οὐχ ὅτι οἱ αὐτοκράτορες ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡμεῖς οἱ ὑπατευκότες διφροφορούμεθα· πρότερον δὲ ἄρα ὅ τε Αὔγουστος καὶ ὁ Τιβέριος ἄλλοι τέ τινες ἐν σκιμποδίοις, ὁποίοις αἱ γυναῖκες ἔτι καὶ νῦν νομίζουσιν, ἔστιν ὅτε ἐφέροντο. οὐ μέντοι καὶ διὰ ταῦθ' οὕτως, ὅσον ὑπό τε τῶν ἐξελευθέρων καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν γυναικῶν αἷς συνῆν, ἐκακύνετο. περιφανέστατα γὰρ τῶν ὁμοίων ἐδουλοκρατήθη τε ἅμα καὶ ἐγυναικοκρατήθη· ἅτε γὰρ ἐκ παίδων ἔν τε νοσηλείᾳ καὶ ἐν φόβῳ πολλῷ τραφείς, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἐπὶ πλεῖον τῆς ἀληθείας εὐήθειαν προσποιησάμενος, ὅπερ που καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν τῇ βουλῇ ὡμολόγησε, καὶ πολὺν μὲν χρόνον τῇ τηθῇ τῇ Λιουίᾳ, πολὺν δὲ καὶ τῇ μητρὶ Ἀντωνίᾳ τοῖς τ' ἀπελευθέροις συνδιαιτηθείς, καὶ προσέτι καὶ ἐν συνουσίαις γυναικῶν πλείοσι γενόμενος, οὐδὲν ἐλευθεροπρεπὲς ἐκέκτητο, ἀλλὰ καίπερ καὶ τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἁπάντων καὶ τῶν ὑπηκόων αὐτῶν κρατῶν ἐδεδούλωτο.

πάνυ δὲ ἐγυναικοκρατήθη ἅμα καὶ ἐδουλοκρατήθη. ἅτε καὶ ἐκ παίδων ἔν τε νοσηλείᾳ καὶ ἐν φόβῳ πολλῷ τραφείς, κἀντεῦθεν εὐήθειαν καὶ ἐπὶ πλεῖον τῆς ἀληθείας προσποιησάμενος καὶ ἦθους χαυνότητα (ὅπερ καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν τῇ βουλῇ ὡμολόγησε), καὶ πολὺν μὲν χρόνον τῇ τήθῃ Λιβίᾳ, πολὺν δὲ τῇ μητρὶ Ἀντωνίᾳ τοῖς τ' ἀπελευθέροις συνδιαιτηθείς, οὐδὲν ἐλευθεροπρεπὲς ἐπεδείκνυτο.

Zonaras includes information about Claudius' lineage and the age of the emperor at the time that he ascended the throne (64), material not included by John. Although the chronographer notes that Claudius had employed his intellectual potential for the writing of history, he skims over Claudius' physical infirmities and their effect on the way that the emperor handled state affairs. This information is treated in toto by Dio and is excerpted by John. All three writers then notes that Claudius was easily swayed by women and slaves. Then the three authors explain the reasons why this was the case. It is in this portion of his narrative that Zonaras gives his readers a clue that he had seen John's narrative as well as that of Dio ; he writes, [Κλαύδιος] ... πάνυ δὲ ἐγυναικοκρατήθη τε ἅμα καὶ ἐδουλοκρατήθη. His source Dio, however, indicates, περιφανέστατα γὰρ τῶν ὁμοίων ἐδουλοκρατήθη τε ἅμα καὶ ἐγυναικοκρατήθη. The chronographer clearly reversed the order of the two aorist passives in Dio. In any other context, one could argue that this was strictly a minor change to be expected in an author who is excerpting an earlier source. But this is not the case for John does the same thing (περιφανέστατα γὰρ ἐγυναικοκρατήθη καὶ ἐδουλοκρατήθη ...). Additionally John eliminated the phrase τῶν ὁμοίων from his narrative, words which are not present in Zonaras' account. When these minor details are taken together, they lead the reader to the conclusion that Zonaras used Dio as his outline and rephrased his narrative with words taken from John. The contention that the chronographer used John as his only source can be ruled out because the former writer includes information about Claudius' lineage which is contained in Dio.

Like the character study of Claudius, Zonaras' description of Nero's flight (11.13) emphasizes different details from Dio than John does.

John, fr. 91, 92[65]	Dio, 63.23.3 ff.	Zonar., 11.13
Ὁ δὲ Νέρων ὡς καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν σωματοφυλάκων κατελείφθη, ἀποκτεῖναι μὲν ἑαυτὸν οὐκ ἐτόλμησεν, ἵνα τὴν αἰσχύνην κερδάνῃ · φυγεῖν δὲ ἐπεχείρησε, πρότερον κεραυνωθείσης αὐτοῦ τῆς τραπέζης · ἐσθῆτά τε φαύλην ἐνδυσάμενος, καὶ ἐφ' ἵππον οὐδὲν βελτίονα	Ἐπεὶ δὲ ᾔσθετο ὅτι καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν σωματοφυλάκων ἐγκαταλέλειπται (ἐν κήποις δέ τισιν ἐτύγχανε καθεύδων), φυγεῖν ἐπεχείρησεν. ἐσθῆτά τε οὖν φαύλην ἔλαβε καὶ ἐπὶ ἵππον οὐδὲν βελτίονα ἀνέβη, καὶ ἐπ' αὐτοῦ κατακεκαλυμμένου πρός χωρίον τι Φάω-	Νέρων δὲ ὡς ᾔσθετο ὅτι ὑπὸ τῶν φυλάκων ἐγκαταλέλειπται, ἐσθῆτά τε φαύλην ἐνέδυ καὶ ἐπὶ ἵππον οὐδὲν βελτίονα ἀνέβη, καὶ κατακεκαλυμμένος ὅπως διαλάθῃ, μετὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου καὶ τοῦ Σπόρου νυκτὸς ἔφυγε. γνωρισθεὶς δὲ ὡς καὶ παρά του τῶν ἀπαντη-

(64) 11.8 (PI 560B5 ff.).

(65) I have rearranged the order of fragments 91 and 92 of John of Antioch in order that they follow the text of Dio. For the original arrangement of the material, see FHG, 4.575-6.

ἀναβὰς, κατακεκαλυμμένος πρὸς χωρίον τι Φάωνος Καισαρείου μετὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου καὶ Σπόρου κατέφυγε. Νυκτὸς δὲ ἔτι οὔσης, καὶ αὐτοῦ ταῦτα πράσσοντος, σεισμὸς ἐξαίσιος ἐν τῇ Ῥώμῃ γέγονε. Καὶ αὐτὸν γνωρισθέντα ὑπό τινων ἀποβῆναι μὲν τοῦ ἵππου παραχρῆμα, ἔς τινα δὲ πλησίον καταφυγεῖν καλαμῶνα· ἐν ᾧ μέχρι πολλοῦ ἐρριμμένος, πάντα μὲν παριόντα ὑπετοπεῖτο, πᾶσαν δὲ φωνὴν, ὡς καὶ ἀναζητοῦσαν [αὐτὸν], ὑπέτρεμε, θρηνῶν τε καὶ ὀλοφυρόμενος ἐν οἷς ἦν πρότερον, καὶ ὅτι ἐν κοπρίᾳ ἔρριπτο.

νος Καισαρείου, μετά τε αὐτοῦ ἐκείνου καὶ μετὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου τοῦ τε Σπόρου, νυκτὸς ἔτι οὔσης, ἤλασε. καὶ αὐτοῦ ταῦτα πράσσοντος σεισμὸς ἐξαίσιος ἐγένετο, ὥστε καὶ δόκησιν παρασχεῖν ὅτι ἥ τε γῆ πᾶσα διαρρήγνυται καὶ αἱ τῶν πεφονευμένων ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ψυχαὶ πᾶσαι ἅμα ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἀναθορνύουσι. γνωρισθεὶς οὖν καὶ ὡς ὑπό τινος, ὥς φασι, τῶν ἀπαντησάντων καὶ αὐτοκράτωρ προσαγορευθείς, ἔκ τε τῆς ὁδοῦ ἀπετράπη καὶ ἐς καλαμώδη τόπον τινὰ κατεκρύφθη. καὶ ἐνταῦθα μέχρι τῆς ἡμέρας ὑπέμεινεν ἐρριμμένος, ὅπως ὡς ἥκιστα διορῷτο. καὶ πάντα μὲν τὸν παριόντα ὡς καὶ ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν ἥκοντα ὑποπτεύων, πᾶσαν δὲ φωνὴν ὡς καὶ ἀναζητοῦσαν αὐτὸν ὑποτρέμων, εἴ τέ που κυνίδιον ὕλαξεν ἢ καὶ ὀρνίθιον ἐφθέγξατο ῥωπίον τε καὶ κλάδος ὑπ' αὔρας ἐσείσθη, δεινῶς ἐταράττετο, καὶ οὔθ' ἡσυχάζειν ὑπ' αὐτῶν ἐδύνατο, οὔτ' αὖ λαλεῖν τινὶ τῶν παρόντων, μὴ καὶ ἕτερός τις ἀκούσῃ, ἐτόλμα, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς καθ' ἑαυτὸν τὴν τύχην καὶ ἐθρήνει καὶ ὠλοφύρετο. ἐλογίζετο γὰρ τά τε ἄλλα, καὶ προσέτι ὅτι πολυανθρωποτάτῃ ποτὲ θεραπείᾳ γαυρωθεὶς μετὰ τριῶν ἐξελευθέρων ἐκύπταζε. τοιοῦτον γὰρ δρᾶμα τότε τὸ δαιμόνιον αὐτῷ παρεσκεύασεν, ἵνα μηκέτι τοὺς ἄλλους μητροσάντων αὐτοκράτωρ προσαγορευθῆναι, τῆς ὁδοῦ ἀπετράπετο, καὶ εἰς καλαμώδη τόπον τινὰ κατεκρύφθη.

Νέρων μὲν οὖν αὐτὸς παρ' ἑαυτῷ ἐτραγῴδει, καὶ ὀψέ ποτε, ἐπεὶ μηδεὶς αὐτὸν ἑώρα, μετῆλθεν εἰς τὸ πλησίον ἄντρον, καὶ διψήσας ἔπιεν ὕδωρ. Ἡ δὲ τῶν Ῥωμαίων βουλὴ πολέμιον αὐτὸν ἀνειποῦσα, δοῦναι δίκας τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἡμαρτημένων τοιόνδε τινὰ τρόπον ἐψηφίσατο· ἀχθῆναι μὲν γὰρ ἐς τὸ δεσμωτήριον γυμνὸν, κεραίας ἐπιβεβλημένης τῷ τραχήλῳ, προστάττεται, μετὰ δὲ σφοδρὸν αἰκισμὸν τοῦ σώματος ὠσθῆναι κατά τινος πέτρας.

Καὶ ἡ πόλις στεφανώμασι καὶ δᾳδουχίαις κεκόσμητο, εὐχάς τε ἀληθεῖς καὶ ἑορτὰς ἐπετέλουν, καὶ τοὺς τε δυνηθέντας ἐπὶ τοῦ τυράννου φονεύοντες, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸν ἐκεῖνον αἰκίζοντες διετέλουν.

Ἃ δὴ προαισθόμενος ὁ Νέρων, τούς τε χωροῦντας ἐπ' αὐτὸν καταδείσας, προσέταξε τοῖς παροῦσι καὶ ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἑαυτοὺς ἀποκτεῖναι. Ἐπεὶ δέ γε οὐχ ὑπήκουσαν, τὸ μὲν ὅτι οὐκ ἐτόλμων, τὸ δὲ ὅτι τὴν ταφὴν αὐτοῦ προεφασίσαντο, δεινῶς ἀλγήσας ἐστέναξεν, ὅτι μηδὲν ἐδύνατο. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο τὸν Σπόρον βουληθεὶς ἀποκτεῖφόνους καὶ ἀλήτας ἀλλ' ἤδη καὶ ἑαυτὸν ὑποκρίνηται καὶ τότε μετεγίνωσκεν ἐφ' οἷς ἐτετολμήκει, καθάπερ ἄπρακτόν τι αὐτῶν ποιῆσαι δυνάμενος. Νέρων μὲν δὴ τοιαῦτα ἐτραγῴδει καὶ τὸ ἔπος ἐκεῖνο συνεχῶς ἐνενόει,

«οἰκτρῶς θανεῖν μ' ἄνωγε σύγγαμος πατήρ.»

ὀψὲ δ' οὖν ποτε, ἐπειδὴ μηδεὶς αὐτὸν ἀναζητῶν ἑωρᾶτο, μετῆλθεν ἐς τὸ ἄντρον, κἀνταῦθα καὶ ἔφαγε πεινήσας ἄρτον ὁποῖον οὐδεπώποτε ἐβεβρώκει, καὶ ἔπιε διψήσας ὕδωρ ὁποῖον οὐδεπώποτε ἐπεπώκει· ἐφ' ᾧ δυσανασχετήσας εἶπε «τοῦτό ἐστιν ἐκεῖνο τὸ ποτὸν τὸ ἐμὸν τὸ ἄπεφθον.»

Καὶ ὁ μὲν ἐν τούτοις ἦν, ὁ δὲ δῆμος τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἐβουθύτει καὶ ὑπερέχαιρε καί τινες καὶ πιλία ὡς ἠλευθερωμένοι ἔφερον. καὶ τῷ Γάλβᾳ τὰ τῇ αὐτοκράτορι ἀρχῇ προσήκοντα ἐψηφίσαντο.

Παρὰ πάντα δὲ ζήτησιν αὐτοῦ τοῦ Νέρωνος ἐποιοῦντο, καὶ χρόνον μέν τινα ἠπόρησαν ὅπου ποτὲ ἀπεληλυθὼς εἴη, ἔπειτα μαθόντες ἔπεμψαν ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἱππέας. καὶ οὕτως ἐκεῖνος προσιόντας αὐτοὺς αἰσθόμενος προσέταξε τοῖς παροῦσιν ἑαυτὸν ἀποκτεῖναι. ἐπεί τε οὐχ ὑπήκουσαν, ἀνεστέναξέ τε καὶ ἔφη «ἐγὼ μόνος οὔτε φίλον οὔτε ἐχθρὸν ἔχω.» κἀν

Ὁ δὲ δῆμος ἐν τῇ Ῥώμῃ, ἐπεὶ ἡμέρα ἐγένετο, ὑπερέχαιρον καὶ τὴν πόλιν στεφανωμάτων ἐπλήρωσαν, καί τινες καὶ πιλία ὡς ἠλευθερωμένοι ἔφερον, καὶ ἡ βουλὴ τῷ Γάλβᾳ τὰ τῇ ἀρχῇ προσήκοντα ἐψηφίσατο. ὁ δὲ ὅμιλος εἴς τε τὸν Νέρωνα ἀπέσκωπτον, καὶ συχνοὺς τῶν παρ' αὐτῷ δυνηθέντων φονεύοντες εἷλκον. ἐκείνου δὲ ζήτησιν οἱ στρατιῶται καὶ ἄλλοι πεποίηντο, καὶ γνόντες ὅποι ποτὲ ἦν, ἔπεμψαν ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἱππέας. ὁ προσιόντας αὐτοὺς αἰσθόμενος προσέταξε τοῖς παροῦσι καὶ ἑαυτὸν καὶ σφᾶς ἀποκτεῖναι. ὡς δ' οὐχ ὑπήκουον, μέγα ἐστέναι διήμαρτεν, ἀποφυγόντος ἐκείνου. Τότε ἔφη· «Ἐγὼ οὐδὲ φίλον οὐδὲ ἐχθρὸν ἔχω·» καὶ τοῦτο εἰπὼν ἑαυτὸν ἐπάταξεν· Νέρων ἰδὼν τοὺς ἀναστήσοντας αὐτὸν παρεκάλει τοὺς συνόντας ἀνελεῖν αὐτόν· ὡς δ' οὐδεὶς ὑπήκουεν, ἑαυτὸν διεχρήσατο· τελευτῶν δὲ ἔφη· «Ὦ Ζεῦ, οἷος (κιθαρῳδὸς) τεχνίτης ἀπόλλυμαι·» δυσθανατοῦντα δὲ ὁ Ἐπαφρόδιτος προσκατειργάσατο.

τούτῳ πελασάντων αὐτῷ τῶν ἱππέων αὐτὸς ἑαυτὸν ἀπέκτεινε, τὸ θρυλούμενον ἐκεῖνο εἰπών, «ὦ Ζεῦ, οἷος τεχνίτης παραπόλλυμαι.» καὶ αὐτὸν δυσθανατοῦντα ὁ Ἐπαφρόδιτος προσκατειργάσατο.

ναξεν. εἶτα τὸν Σπόρον ἀνελεῖν θελήσας καὶ μὴ δυνηθείς, «ἐγὼ μόνος» ἔφη «οὔτε φίλον οὔτε ἐχθρὸν ἔχω.» καὶ ἤδη πελασάντων τῶν ἱππέων αὐτὸς ἑαυτὸν ἐπάταξεν, εἰπών, «ὦ Ζεῦ, οἷος τεχνίτης ἀπόλλυμαι.» δυσθανατοῦντα δ' αὐτὸν ὁ Ἐπαφρόδιτος προσκατειργάσατο.

From a cursory evaluation, it is quite clear that Zonaras has excised some of the material that is contained in John and Dio. The chronographer simply notes that Nero put on shabby clothing and fled with his retainers Epaphroditus and Sporus ; when he was recognized by some of those who encountered him, he hid himself in a swampy place (66). Dio, however, adds details about the emperor's destination and an earthquake which occurred while Nero was en route, material also mentioned by John. John and Dio also discuss Nero's state of mind while the emperor was in hiding, facts not mentioned by Zonaras. Both sources also note that the fleeing emperor was disturbed by the noises of nature around him ; additionally, these same sources include a description of Nero's eating habits at the time-material which Zonaras left out of his account. In this section Zonaras clearly obtained the outline of his narrative from Dio, yet there is linguistic evidence that the chronographer employed John's account. Where Dio used ὅτι, ἔλαβε, and ἤλασε, Zonaras employed ὡς, ἐνέδυ, and ἔφυγε. He lifted this material from John's treatment (67).

From the description of the flight itself, the chronographer turns his attention to the jubilation of the Roman people at the news of Nero's flight. He adds that the plebs slaughtered those who had been powerful in the emperor's court and that the Senate voted Galba the office of emperor. John's narrative is more extensive than that of Zonaras and he notes that the citizens of the city tore down statues of the emperor ; he also gives the substance of the decree which the Senate issued when Nero left town.

(66) 11.13 (PI 571A1 ff.).
(67) E.g., fr 91 (ll. 38 ff.), ὡς ... ἐνδυσάμενος ... κατέφυγέ.

Dio's narrative is shorter and omits any reference to the fate of those who survived Nero.

The description of events in Rome contained in Dio is problematic. Of all three versions, it is the shortest. From the language and the details the chronographer uses, it is evident that Zonaras obtained his information from Dio ; yet he includes details of the fate of Nero's henchmen, material contained only in John. The chronographer clearly used John. In other words, Zonaras employed John's narrative in preference to that of Dio for the latter's account was no longer completely preserved (68).

Finally Zonaras treats the death of Nero. He indicates that the emperor, as soon as he realized that the army was pursuing him, commanded those with him to kill him ; when they refused to do so, he attempted to kill himself and Epaphroditus completed the task. The details of the event are reported in a similar manner by John and Dio (69). Although Zonaras' account again has its roots in Dio, he replaces a number of words in Dio with those which he found in John (70). He also substitutes John's ἀπόλλυμι for Dio's παραπόλλυμι. Once again the Antiochene's account has had a decided effect on the chronographer's narrative. He also notes that Nero had wished to kill Sporus. He could have obtained this information only from John since the data is not mentioned by Dio.

Taking all this evidence together, one has to admit that the chronographer must have had the narrative of both his predecessors before him. When one source did not provide him with the information that he wanted, he turned to the other. Naturally Zonaras would have compared both sources since they both treated the same material. Nor is it surprising that we find words from John embedded in Zonaras' excerpts of Dio. After all, like any other writer, the chronographer was influenced by what he read. No one seems to have formulated this contention before (71).

(68) Perhaps this information indicates that the text of Dio was still extant in John's day , but, by the time of Xiphilinus, much of the material was no longer extant. If this is the case, it is clear that Zonaras used John's account for some of the detail included in this section.

(69) Dio Cass , 63.29.1ff ; John of Antioch, fr. 91 (ll. 67 ff), FHG 4.576.

(70) E.g., Dio, ἑαυτὸν ; Zonar., καὶ ἑαυτὸν καὶ σφᾶς ; John of Antioch. ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἑαυτοὺς ...

(71) I find it surprising that this aspect of John's relationship to Zonaras has not been studied before. Perhaps it is due to Kocher's contention that John used a text of Dio which was full of interpolations and the like (A. Kocher, De Joannis Antiocheni aetate, fontibus, auctoritate [diss. Bonn, 1871], 10 ff.). Yet in 1888 Sotiriadis demonstrated that there was nothing in John not available in Dio and Xiphilinus and that any differences between the texts of Dio and John may be the

APPENDIX B

Patzig's Hypothesis, its Strengths and Weaknesses

Patzig's hypothesis is perhaps the greatest advance in the study of Zonaras in this century. At any rate, it helps to explain the origins of a large portion of the chronographer's information. His thesis has at least one major ramification. He noted that fragment 161 of John of Antioch was derived from Eutropius. Additionally he pointed out that Zonaras used this section of John in the Epitome. From this evidence he concluded that any portion of Zonaras which had its roots in Eutropius must have been derived from John of Antioch. He applied this thesis to 12.31-33 of the Epitome and showed the validity of his approach (72).

Similarly Patzig attempted to reconstruct the lost portions of Ammianus' account with those parts of Zonaras' account which could be definitely shown to have been derived from John of Antioch. Unfortunately he was carried away by his own rhetoric and drew some conclusions which the evidence did not support. The most drastic example of this was his analysis of Zonaras' account of the house of Sapor II. The chronographer described the family tree of Sapor, the cruelty of Adarnarses, and the flight of Hormisdas from the Persian court. This segment of Zonaras' narrative is clearly excerpted from fragment 178.1 of John of Antioch (73). Patzig argued that John obtained his information from Ammianus. Yet John and Zonaras make a real error in their accounts which I believe that Ammianus would not have done. From Eutropius we learnt that Sapor II was the grandson of Narses (74) ; John and the chronographer claim that Sapor was Narses' son ! If Eutropius knew Sapor's geneology, it is reasonable to assume that Ammianus would have known this fact also. Since he spent a great deal of time researching his history and actually took part in the eastern campaigns of Julian, he must have known this basic fact. For this reason I cannot accept Patzig's contention that John derived his information from Ammianus. Additio-result of the large number of sources that John employed (G. SOTIRIADIS, "Zur Kritik des Johannes von Antiochia", JCP, 16 (1888), 48 ff.).

(72) BZ, 13 (1904), 19 ff.

(73) Ibid., 31-2 ; ZONAR., 13.5.17 ; JOHN OF ANTIOCH, fr. 178.1, FHG, 4.605 ; for a detailed discussion of this segment of the chronographer's narrative, see DIMAIO, 270 ff.

(74) 9.25.1.

nally Patzig claims that fragment 181 of John is connected with Ammianus' account of Metrodorus (75). Although Patzig adduces much circular argumentation to support his claim. John's own words are too vague to back it up. All that John says is that ... Κωνσταντῖνος ὁ μέγας λίθους πολυτελεῖς πέμψας τοῖς πέρας Ἴστρου ἔθνεσιν, ἐπέγραψε 'τῷ μείζονι τῷ δῶρον.' τοῦτο γέγονεν αὐτοῖς αἴτιον ἀπωλείας.

GLS, University of Rhode Island, Kingston, Rhode Island. Michael DiMaio, II.

(75) Amm. Marc., 25.4.23 ; BZ, 13 (1904), 28 ff.